

Final Project

Divorce seems to be fairly common these days. Why aren't couples getting along? For my final project, I will be comparing Divorce rates of men and women and correlating that with Household Income. Data will be pulled from American Fact Finder.

Divorce rates per 1,000 men and 1,000 women ages 15 and over. These will provide estimates over the last 5 years.

I will also be including household income over a 12-month period. There will be data over the last 5 years to choose from.

Questions:

Does making too much money or too little have any effect on divorce rates?

Is there a "sweet spot" in earnings that sees a major drop in divorce rates?
